Interesting Stories

Baron Britten

Britten was so beloved in England that he was awarded a life peerage in 1976. He was the first ever composer to be honoured with such a prize and it resulted in a change of name. Henceforth, Britten became known as Baron Britten of Aldeburgh in the British County of Suffolk. His influence on 20th-century composition was so significant that one hundred years after his death, more than 2,000 events held in 39 countries were thrown to celebrate Britten's centenary year.

Suffolk

Britten was at his happiest when he was working from his home county Suffolk. He was inspired by the natural world that surrounded him and the sounds it produced. He would listen to birdsong on long walks and observe the rustle of the trees or the sound of the waves on the shore. These soundscapes were always in his mind when he composed. Britten even taught birdsong, he was an ornithologist meaning a person who is an expert on birds.
